

Instructional design is an emerging field that focuses on how to use new media and instructional technologies to create environments and programs that enhance teaching and learning. The Master of Education in Instructional Design and Technology provides individuals with the technical and organizational skills for creating and delivering education and training in a range of settings, — including the traditional classroom, online, and blended environments. For reasons of speed, cost, and efficiency, organizations are shifting to electronic platforms for upgrading the knowledge, skills, and competencies of its employees through online and blended programs.
